BOYS' CAPTURE OF CONEY DID

Peekskill Academy Fugitives Came to Sad End on Island.

Six little chaps, ranging in age from ton to fourteen years, crept upon the Williamsburg Bridge about dawn today. The boys were dishevelled, their clothes were torn and mussed and their faces were dirty. They came in Indian file. The tailest of them was in front, and he stopped crying long enough to call to the boys behind him:

"Be game! We'll get across." Every boy of the six was sobbing and every one of them was sunkencheeked and hungry. But the leader had told them to be game and they would be game.
"And where are you from?" asked

"Peekskill." came in chorus, "and we are broke and hungry, too." "I thought so," said the policeman "I have been looking for you kids since you left home Wednesday. Now the och of you come with me.'

The six boys crowded about the policeman. Two of them caught his big hand and held on tight, and the four others clutched at his coattails as he led them to Police Headquarters. There they were too hungry to tell anything except the truth. Food was brought them, and then more food was brought, and they ate as only six hungry, growing youngsters can eat, and then they ate more. Then they got sleepy and several of them cried until their eyes closed, and it was all over until they had rest.

Lefferts Mable, the youngest of the bunch of runaways, was the last to close his eyes. He wanted his mother. He would also like to see his father, but he added:

"I'm sorter scared about him. He hits hard."

Then the boy whose father believes in training his own son told the police the names of his comrades. He began:
"There was Dean Tompkins, he's big and a man. He's fourteen. I wish I was the man Dean is. Then there's Jim Valentine, he's thirteen, and Joe Holmes, thirteen, and Victor Ferries, thirteen, and Raymond Broadle, twelve Then there's me. I don't count, 'cause I'm a kid.

"Well, we fellows decided to come to Coney Island last Monday afternoon. We had been at school all day and we met in the woods and deckied we would go to Coney Island end ride elephants and things.

"We had $3.50 in the bunch-that's a lot of money. Well, we got to New York and we saw Coney Island. We walked most of the way there and we walked all of the way back, and now I want to go home."

At the mention of home the boy burst into tears. The parents of the six boys will come to New York to-day to bake them home. And then there will be a secuel-but why tell of this painful incident? It will simply be a story of old-fishioned punishment, and six boys will stand up to tell their experience. at Coney Island.

GIRL DRAGGED BY

f humanity that poured from east side ovels to west side sweatshops along Grand street to-day was a young woman, shapely and well dressed, with a perfect face and an abundance of rich, wavy hair. She was in more of a hurry than the others, so when she reached Centre street she could hardly wait for a Madison avenue car to pass. At this corner the car turns over toward the Bowery and the girl, miscauculating its speed, stepped in behind it a second too soon. Her skirt swept into the steel fender at the rear, was caught and in an instant she was whipped off her feet and dragged along the stones. She screamed once and then fainted.

In an instant there was panic among an, shapely and well dressed, with a fainted.

In an instant there was panic among the hundreds passing. Women shrieked and men shouted and cursed at the motorman. When he comprehended the situation the motorman threw on his brakes so hard that the passengers were huried like dice to the end of the car. The girl was carried into a nearby store and a St. Vincent's Hospital ambulance was called.
